Overview

2. From the roots of Canada's colonial origins through its efforts to throw off the yoke of slavery and to stand up against the abhorrent practices of apartheid and racial genocide, Canada has purportedly committed itself to the virtue of eradicating and preventing racism and inequality as a matter of social policy, Canadian values, constitutional mandate and international law and convention. The multicultural character of Canada is enshrined in our Constitution and in our laws as a founding legal principle.
3. Canada has sought to implement systems intended to address the scourge of racism.
4. And yet, despite these efforts and legislative actions intended to remedy the realities of inequality for Black Canadians, the measures put in place to date to remedy systemic discrimination against Black Canadians have failed to redress these harms and have instead exacerbated the systemic inequalities and racism faced by Black Canadians, particularly in the hiring and promotion practices within the Public Service. The evils of systemic discrimination permeate Canada's institutional structures and unwittingly keep Black Canadians subjugated as second class citizens.

5. There has been a de facto practice of Black employee exclusion throughout the Public Service because of the permeation of systemic discrimination through Canada's institutional structures.

6. Legislative action through Employment Equity statutes intended to redress systemic inequalities and through human rights statutes aimed at preventing individual discrimination based on race have merely masked the increasing disparity, exclusion and marginalization of Black Canadians from equal access to opportunities and benefits that have enabled other groups to share in the prosperity of Canadian social and economic life through meaningful employment in the Public Service free from discrimination.

7. Systemic barriers to equality have shown themselves to be particularly pernicious in the hiring and promotion practices of the Public Service and have resulted in the insidious practice of Black employee exclusion.

8. Within the Public Service, the mandate of constitutional equality as a basic right of citizenship and as a Canadian social value has been systematically denied to Black Canadians, particularly through denial of opportunities for promotion based on racial exclusion.

9. Despite numerous studies, reports, commissions and recommendations to address the horrible systemic inequities faced by Black employees in the Public Service, the reality of equal opportunity remains elusive to Black Canadians both in unionized and non-unionized workplaces throughout the Public Service.

10. Labour Collective Agreements, Human Rights Codes and Tribunals and Employment Equity Laws and Commissions have simply not been able to break the yoke of systemic racism for Black Canadians or to overcome decades of marginalization and the pervasive systemic practice of Black employee exclusion throughout the Public Service.

11. Canada's employment equity, labour and human rights laws and institutions have served to exacerbate rather than eradicate the practice of Black employee exclusion. They have increased systemic racism in a way that has deprived Black employees of opportunities and benefits afforded to others based on their race and despite their merit and willingness to contribute to Canadian society through public service.

12. From the late 1960's onward, the policies followed by Canada to seek employment equity and freedom from discrimination have failed Black employees in the Public Service due to an institutional framework built on systemic racism and racial inequality. Reliance on the Employment Equity Act and related measures as a means to achieve equal opportunity and benefit of the law relative to the hiring and promotion of Black employees in the Public Service has subjected Class Members to persistent discriminatory, humiliating and injurious treatment, demeaning their dignity and self-respect. Class Members have persistently been subject to the systemic and pervasive and unlawful practice of Black employee exclusion.

13. Class Members have suffered significant economic harm and lasting psychological damage from Canada's practice of Black employee exclusion. These harms include anxiety, shame, grief, loss of dignity and significant financial losses.

14. A mandatory Court order to implement the aforementioned Diversity and Promotional Plan is required in order to end the practice of Black employee exclusion and to secure equality under the law and equal benefit of the law for Black employees of the Public Service.

Class Definition

15. The Class in the within action includes all Black individuals who at any time during the Class Period worked for Canada as part of the Public Service as defined in Schedule "A" since 1970.

16. The Class also includes all individuals who, by reason of a relationship with a Class Member, are entitled to assert a claim pursuant to the Family Law Act, RSO 1990 c F.3, and equivalent or comparable legislation in other provinces and territories ("Family Members").

The Black Experience in Canada: The Personal Voice of Systemic Discrimination

17. For close to 400 years, Black Canadians have faced and continue to face prejudice, inequalities, tangible and invisible systemic barriers to full and equal participation in Canadian society. This dates back to the enslavement of African people in Canada as property and not as people.

18. Between 1629 and 1834, there were more than 4,000 enslaved people of African descent in Canada. Children, women, and men were reduced to property that could be bought and sold, exploited for their labour, and subjected to physical, sexual and psychological trauma, which has left its mark on all future generations.

19. Despite these challenges, Black people fought for the right to fight for Canada. They fought equally and bravely in all wars making the ultimate sacrifice for love of country. This is so even where it meant exclusion from White only army units and fighting in Black only units of the Canadian Armed Forces.

20. After 1970, a new multiculturalism policy and Immigration Act ushered in a wave of new Black immigrants to build on this rich cultural past and to help shape a new Canadian Multicultural Mosaic as part of the Trudeau legacy.

21. However, despite overcoming many challenges and a rich history of building and contributing to Canada, Black Canadians in the Public Service continue to experience the legacy of practices and policies institutionalized many generations ago including the practice of Black employee exclusion.

22. These practices and policies consist of institutional patterns of behaviour that are part of the social and administrative structures of the state and/or the Public Service. They create and perpetuate a position of relative disadvantage for Black employees and privilege for other groups and individuals on account of their group identity. These experiences are perpetuated by the past and continued practice of Black employee exclusion from and within the Public Service as well as by structural and institutional systemic racism.

23. Among the Plaintiffs and Class Members, there is a shared experience which is reflected by the following comments by Plaintiff Nicholas Marcus Thompson:

Arriving on my first day of Civil Service work, I was filled with ideas of excellence, intellectual adventure and unending possibilities. I was soon to experience disappointment in all three categories.

With my skin colour, I felt the sting of exclusion and limits at every level: work assignments, responsibility and advancement.

There were no Black role models in the top echelon of the Civil Service to encourage me in my work. Black employees were ghettoized in the lower ranks. Occasionally a Black person was advanced to the middle ranks but rarely higher.

Merit was not a guiding principle for project assignment or advancement. Prejudice and its handmaiden, indifference, made the world polite, cool and lonely to the point of permanent exclusion.

That is Canadian-style systemic racism. I felt the sting but no one noticed my cry. Worse, no one cared to help relieve the pain and the structures and systems in place exacerbated rather than solved these problems. The pain soon became permanent. It fostered resentment, then anger and then resignation to a lower status. Rage is not part of the Canadian way. There was no meaningful outlet and I was confined to accept my place in the lower ranks for life. It echoed a darker past without the markets, the cash and the servitude. Always polite but always racist.

It is time to break these psychological 'iron shackles' and free 'merit' now, imprisoned, as it is in Canada, as an unusable quality for a Black person in the Canada Civil Service. Merit based advancement without limits is a proven booster for the economy and a human rights triumph beyond the human rights legal words, slogans and high brow constitutional phrases, for us, lying on dusty shelves because of underuse and indifference.

Feel our pain, release us to the sunshine of merit fields, let us join the Canadian experiment and make it better.

THE EXPERIENCE OF THE REPRESENTATIVE PLAINTIFFS EXEMPLIFIES THE HARMS DONE TO CLASS MEMBERS AND MANDATES THIS CLASS ACTION

Jennifer Phillips

24. Jennifer Phillips has been employed by the Canada Revenue Agency for over 30 years.

From the start of her career she was belittled and made to feel worthless relative to her non-Black colleagues.

25. Phillips worked diligently throughout her career and despite her desire to move beyond her position of Collections Officer she was only promoted once in 30 years. She watched as fellow non-Black colleagues, some of whom she had trained, climbed the ranks and enjoyed the benefits of a system designed to lift them up while holding her down.

26. Phillips was throughout her employment subjected to injurious conduct by Canada.

27. Phillips was subjected to persistent acts of discrimination on the basis of her race and observed the same of other Black colleagues, including the following:

- a. explicit and demeaning comments made about their race, national or ethnic origin, religion and/or colour;
- b. attitudes and comments dismissing their ability to carry out their duties because of their race and ethnicity;
- c. non-Black employees of equivalent rank/experience receiving greater accommodation on sick leave, vacation requests, shift changes and transfer requests;

- d. non-Black employees of equivalent rank/experience were assigned to more complex files and tasks and received better career training, education, counselling and mentorship, received more positive performance reviews and were more likely to be considered for promotion.

28. Phillips sought to work through her union and through the Employment Equity process in an effort to redress the systemic discrimination and denial of promotions to her and to other Black employees. Ultimately, efforts were taken to write to the CRA Commissioner and to work through the National Employment Equity and Diversity Committee whose membership comprised one person who was Black. These efforts were completely fruitless in resolving Phillips' issues and concerns and she suffered stress, anxiety, depression, difficulty maintaining relationships and social phobia.

Nicholas Marcus Thompson

29. Thompson is employed as a Collections Contact Officer at Canada Revenue Agency. CRA employs over 40,000 persons across Canada. Thompson worked as a union representative to address issues of systemic racism and Black employee exclusion at CRA. Despite these efforts, CRA failed to hire or promote Black employees at all, or in a manner proportional to their percentage of the Public Service and to the population at large. Thompson has repeatedly been denied promotions as a consequence of his race and due to his advocacy on behalf of other Black employees.

30. The practice of Black employee exclusion is manifest in the upper ranks of the CRA where Black employees remain largely invisible:

- i. At the Board of management level, which oversees the CRA, there are no Black appointees.

- ii. At the Commissioners level there are no Black Employees.
- iii. At the Assistant Commissioner level, there is no Black employee.
- iv. At the Director level, there are 2 Black employees out of approximately 70 across the country.
- v. At the Assistant Director level, there is 1 Black employee out of over 150 executives.

31. Thompson was made a target for his efforts to assist other Black employees and to improve hiring and promotion practices at CRA. Thompson experienced physical and emotional distress and was frequently demeaned and deprived of further promotional opportunities due to his efforts.

Kathy Ann Samuel

32. Kathy Ann Samuel is employed by the Public Service in the Department of Public Prosecutions ("Public Prosecutions") as a Legal Assistant where she has worked for over 19 years. During this time she only received one promotion, which was short term acting for 8 months.

33. Samuel feels defeated and has stopped applying for promotions:

What is the point, you only get disappointed, frustrated and further traumatized. My morale and spirit is at an all time low. I have no confidence in the process. I work for Justice on behalf of the Federal Government and yet justice remains denied for Black employees.

34. Samuel has witnessed Black lawyers and support staff became frustrated and disillusioned by management at Public Prosecutions. These Black employees have been the victims of the practice of Black employee exclusion due to systemic racism.

Michelle Herbert

35. Michelle Herbert works as a Payment Service Officer at a call-centre for Employment and Social Development Canada. She has been employed with the Public Service for 6 years. Herbert was overlooked for promotions and pay raises in 2016, 2018 and 2019 as a direct consequence of the practice of Black employee exclusion and systemic racism.

36. Ironically, the mission of ESDC is “to build a stronger and more inclusive Canada, to support Canadians in helping them live productive and rewarding lives and improving Canadians’ quality of life.” ESDC has repeatedly failed in that mission to Herbert.

Wagna Celidon

37. Wagna Celidon worked for Corrections Canada for 28 years. In her last role she served as a Data Quality and Training Officer. She was repeatedly denied and passed over for various positions that she was exceedingly qualified for. Positions were given to White employees despite Celidon’s greater qualifications.

38. The systemic racism and institutional discrimination that Ms. Celidon faced led her doctor as well as her therapist to recommend that, to avoid further damage to her health, she immediately leave CSC, even with only one year left to qualify for a full pension.

39. This difficult decision has caused her a financial loss of approximately $300 per month, forcing her to seek a part-time job to compensate for it.

40. This failure to promote had an impact on her mental and physical health and ultimately she was forced to take early retirement at age 48 because “I had had enough, I experienced a career filled with disappointment, unfair treatment and rampant institutional systemic discrimination.”

Duane Guy Guerra

41. Duane Guy Guerra has been a full-time employee of the Department Of National Defense (“DND”) as a Heavy Equipment Technician VHE 10 for 21 years since 1999.

42. Guerra is also an active member of the Canadian Armed Forces (“CAF”) where he serves as a corporal.

43. Guerra is part of the 32 Service Battalion operating out of the Denison Armory in Toronto, Ontario. Guerra joined the CAF in June 2015 and has been a part-time member ever since. Guerra has participated in six national emergencies over this time and was part of a NATO exercise in 2018.

44. Guerra is currently preparing to deploy on another NATO peacekeeping mission to Europe starting in January of 2021.

45. Like many other Black Public Service employees, Guerra began his employment with the Public Service and in particular with DND, with great hope and enthusiasm. This was however short-lived. He stated:

My first time being a victim of disguised discrimination was an internal job competition in which I was the winner of the competition, and management chose to run the competition three times until they achieved their desired result. In the end I was still the highest scoring candidate. However HR explained to me that management reserves the right to choose the candidate that was the “best fit,” which was a new employee who also happened to be Caucasian and had less than two years’ experience with the department.

46. In 2007 Guerra was awarded a 9-month contract to work overseas with a defense contractor. This position would have paid a minimum of $90,000 for time spent abroad. The management team had agreed to allow Guerra a leave of absence. The deployment was discussed with his family. He had their full support. Three days prior to his deployment he was called into the Commanding Officer's chambers, along with his supervisors and the union president:

I assumed it was to sign the final documentation, but instead the Commanding Officer slid a piece of paper to the union president and stated that they had an "operational requirement" for me to remain with the unit not allowing me to take advantage of this once in a lifetime opportunity.

In my 20 years of experience and the experiences of other members whom I have represented as chief steward, during these investigations and grievances supported and filed by members of Local 625 in other sections and departments, the problem of institutional systemic racial discrimination remains a serious hindrance to the progress and positive development of this federal organization. My dreams and aspirations which I spent my life preparing for were never able to materialize and grow in a toxic unsupportive environment.

Stuart Philp

47. Philp has been a regular member of the RCMP for over 18 years joining in 2002. On joining the RCMP, he attended the RCMP Training program where he experienced the following:

A short time into my training, while in the cadet lounge, one of the other cadets grabbed me by my lips and told me I was the darkest skinned Black person they had ever met. A few days later, I brought this to the attention of my facilitators.... A short time after that I was told that I was overly-sensitive...

48. After completing Training, Philp was sent to Burnaby, British Columbia where there were no Black supervisors in any of the units. During his tenure in British Columbia, he worked General Duty Patrol, Investigative Support and eventually Major Crimes. During his years in the investigative units, he was the only Black member. Senior ranks at the detachment were all held by non-visible minorities.

49. The rank structure for regular members of the RCMP has over a dozen levels. Despite his hard work and commitment to take professional development courses, Philp still remains a Corporal, one level above the lowest rank of a Constable.

50. Philp returned to Ontario in the fall of 2007 and was seconded to the Toronto Police Service until 2011. He was assigned to the Toronto West Detachment where there was one Black Sergeant and two Black Corporals. Again, senior ranks at the detachment were all held by non-visible minorities.

51. There are no Black members reflected in the ranks of Chief Superintendent, Assistant and Deputy Commissioners.

52. The Commanding Officers of the RCMP in Canadian Provinces and Territories are White men and women, as are the Director General of National Headquarters and the Commanding Officer of National Division. Black Inspectors in other provinces have remained at the rank of Inspector for extended periods while newly promoted White inspectors rapidly climb the career ladder. Black RCMP members are repeatedly overlooked for promotions as part of an ongoing practice of Black employee exclusion.

Shalane Rooney

53. Rooney began working at Statistics Canada in 2010. In an office of approximately 300 there were only 2 Black employees none of whom held management positions. Rooney was forced to endure highly racial comments from other employees. Rooney has been denied promotions and raises over the course of her tenure as part of the practice of Black employee exclusion. She has been subject to systemic discrimination and racial comments as follows:

Comments regarding my hair, my skin being too fair to have two black parents confirming with me if it is ok to say the "N" word, to discussing racial slurs.... The workplace became a place I dreaded in fear of having awkward conversations with co-workers.

Yonita Parkes

54. Parkes began her employment with Immigration, Refugees and Citizenship Canada in 2017. Immediately she witnessed that there is a clustering of Black employees in low-level positions.

55. As a consequence of the treatment she received from a series of co-workers related to her race, she made a formal complaint. The result was “all three individuals were laterally shuffled out of my unit rather than being held accountable for their behaviour.”

56. Parkes became ostracized as a victim of Black employee exclusion while those who displayed racist attitudes and comments were enabled to move on within the Public Service. Internal Complaint systems were incapable of addressing the harms to Parkes in the same way that they have proven unable to address the problems related to race experienced by Black employees throughout the Public Service.

57. Rather than addressing the issues of Systemic discrimination the actions of Canada were to transfer the problem employees to another unit without any recognition of the damages they had caused. In short, complaints are dismissed, and by reporting forms of institutional systemic racism and discrimination the victim becomes permanently victimized by the system.

Daniel Malcolm

58. Malcolm has been employed at Canada Revenue Agency for almost 27 years. Presently he serves as an excluded manager at the MG-06 level, unrepresented by a labour union. He was recently permanently appointed to the MG-06 level after acting in the position continuously from May 2014 to September 2018 and again from June 2019 to April 2020, a total of approximately 5.5 years. His acting assignments were always based on meeting criteria set by management to pull candidates from qualified pools. In September of 2018, his acting assignment was terminated and given to another individual without a staffing process. This was against the CRA policy but designed for the Manager to choose the person he desired rather than Malcolm whose experience of acting in the position made him the most qualified. In fact, the qualified pool, of which Malcolm was part was ignored completely:

As a Black person, I felt that this action was racially motivated against me. As my performance reviews were above average, management did not provide a reasonable explanation for this action. As an excluded manager, I was not entitled to union representation. Therefore, I did not seek recourse. I also felt that recourse would have jeopardized any opportunities for future promotions.

In 2019, management made several promotions at the MG-06 level from a qualified pool that I was in. Despite being as qualified or more qualified than most candidates in the pool I was overlooked for appointment based on the criteria that management set to appoint the people they wanted to appoint. There are not many black people at the MG-06 level or higher in the CRA in the GTA (about two of us in the GTA, and possibly in the country). Black people are frequently overlooked when management sets criteria to make appointments from pools to favor those they want to appoint. This results in Black employee exclusion based on systemic discrimination.

For my entire career at the agency, as a Black man I have had to keep my head down, and not speak out against injustices, for me to get ahead. I have seen how other black employees are easily blacklisted when they speak out. This has affected me mentally. Our identities are not valued and our skin color is the key factor in treating us differently.

Alain Babineau

59. Babineau is a 28-year veteran of the RCMP from January 1989 to September 2016.

Following his tenure with the RCMP he obtained a JD in law. Throughout his career, Babineau protected three Prime Ministers of Canada, Jean Chrétien, Stephen Harper and Justin Trudeau in the Prime Minister's Security Detail unit of the RCMP.

60. In 1981, Babineau first applied to the RCMP. During his recruiting interview held in Riviere du Loup, Quebec, he was asked by an RCMP recruiting officer: "What are you going to do if you get called a "Nigger"? Babineau was then denied employment with the Force.

Babineau's experience denied him the financial stability and benefits of full time employment with the RCMP.

61. In 1984, Babineau re-applied with the RCMP. Babineau learned that the recruiting officer from 1981, had "racially profiled" him as a drug pusher in his small Quebec hometown and filed a false report on his character. Based on that false report Babineau was once again rejected by the RCMP.

62. Frustrated and beaten, Babineau turned to the Canadian Human Rights Commission for help in 1985. This was a futile experience. Babineau went on to study Criminology and was hired by the OPP in 1988. While serving with the OPP and 2 years after filing the human rights complaint against the RCMP, the RCMP offered him a position which he accepted. This was 8 years after his initial application.

63. In early 1989, Babineau went on to the RCMP Depot in Regina Saskatchewan for basic training. During his stay at Depot, he remembers seeing only approximately 4 Black individuals in any of the RCMP troops that went through training there. There were no Black instructors or managers. Upon graduating from the RCMP Academy, Babineau worked for 10 years on narcotics investigations in Toronto. Babineau was repeatedly denied opportunities for promotion over the course of his career with the RCMP:

There has always been during my career this underlying reflection that I was not engaged because of my abilities or my knowledge, even if I already had a baccalaureate at the time. In Toronto, the head of the drug section, instead of calling me by my name, often called me "Black man". He was a man of another generation and for him, I was a "novelty" ... But at some point, it becomes intolerable! It's not my name. This is the type of micro-aggression we endured as Black Officers, but we shut our mouths and endure, on the belief that we can help to bring about change.

64. Babineau was required to give up his career with the RCMP to pursue other alternatives that afforded him greater opportunity for advancement. Babineau retired in 2016 and then completed two law degrees at McGill Faculty of Law.

65. Possession of social capital is essential to success and advancement in the RCMP. The practice of Black employee exclusion has resulted in an insufficient critical mass of Black employees in leadership positions and has denied Black RCMP members opportunities that are more readily available to others in the ranks.

66. In 2017 there were approximately 300 black Mounties or less than 2 per cent of over 18,000 sworn members. Resistance to diversity and inclusion is strongest among the non-commissioned officers' ranks of the RCMP from which future Officers are drawn, particularly relative to decisions on hiring and promotion.

67. RCMP employment equity efforts were superficial, inconsistent and focused mostly at the entry level. They failed to deal expressly with the unique challenges faced by Black employees in hiring and promotion. These efforts contributed to the practice of Black employee exclusion in the RCMP. They also deprived Babineau and others of meaningful opportunities for promotion within the ranks of the RCMP.

Bernadeth Betchi

68. Bernadeth Betchi worked approximately 10 years with the CRA from 2009 to 2019 where she was moved from team to team, was bridged in as a term position continually while her white counterparts were receiving higher paying and secure permanent positions. She holds a Masters Degree in Women's and Gender Studies focusing on the Black motherhood experience, mental health and reproductive rights in the global north. She is also a professor of Communications and Human Rights at Algonquin College in Ottawa.

69. In 2018, after having her second child and after having completed a Masters Degree in Women and Gender Studies, Betchi was offered a part-time position at CRA in the International and Large Business Compliance and Criminal Investigations Branch.

70. She was hired to oversee the Gender Based Analysis (GBA+) portfolio in that division. Even with a Masters and years of experience Betchi continued to be treated as a second class worker by CRA. She experienced stress, anxiety, trauma and burn-out as a direct consequence of the way she was treated at CRA. She also discovered that her compensation at CRA was significantly less than other non-Black employees in comparable positions, particularly given her education.

My experience at the Canada Revenue Agency was emotionally and physically draining. I moved from team to team, was bridged in as a term while my white counterparts were all given permanent and interesting (higher positions) right from the get-go. Every time I would discuss any type of advancement opportunities, I would reiterate my skills, express my enthusiasm, I was never given clear answers. It was clear that they wanted to keep me in the same box and had no intentions of helping me move forward in my career.

71. In 2019 Betchi received an offer to work at the Canadian Human Rights Commission. She accepted a lower level position in order to take the opportunity to work in the human rights field and for the mandate of the Commission. On September 16, 2020 Betchi was required to take a leave of absence from the Commission for the following reasons:

My decision to take some time away is due, in large part, to the stress of a poisoned work environment. I have been pushing, physically and mentally, since I first made an official request to be considered for an EC06 opportunity back in May 2020. Despite my new Manager's lack of insight into my work history at the Commission or elsewhere and without any conversations with me the Manager denied my request for the opportunity to serve in a position I was more than qualified for and thus refused re-Classification of my appointment.

As a result of the workplace environment, I have developed a high level of anxiety. I feared for my health as well as the safety of my pregnancy if I continued working in that toxic environment.

The unfair and opaque hiring practices and promotion processes, the inappropriate and demeaning comments made to me by my Director and Manager, and the complete invalidation from senior management on what is happening at the Commission and my experience are all contributing factors to my very difficult decision to take the leave of absence.

72. As a consequence of the experience of her mistreatment and Black employee exclusion, Betchi lost faith in the Commission's ability to execute its mandate, seeing as it could not even promote equity within its own teams.

73. Betchi's experience within the CHRC is not an isolated situation. Black employees came and went before her. Many were at the Commission for many years and experienced the same Institutional racism and systemic discrimination which Betchi experienced and witnessed first hand.

74. At the CHRC Black employees directly approached upper management to raise their concerns pertaining to the Commission's practices that foster institutional, interpersonal, and systemic discrimination. These concerns were dismissed by the CHRC without meaningful action ever being taken to address them.

75. At the CHRC there is currently a lack of representation at all levels. Black employees are chronically underrepresented in management positions.

76. Betchi pleads that "the present institutional structures of the public service have already started killing our souls, contributing to the deterioration of our physical and mental well-being."

77. Prior to working at the CHRC Betchi worked at the Prime Minister Office, as Sophie Grégoire Trudeau's Communications Assistant.

Promises Unfulfilled for Black Employees

78. The Canadian Bill of Rights was passed in 1960 and recognized individual rights and freedoms, including the right to employment without regard to race, national origin, colour, religion or sex.

79. In 1970, Canada became a signatory to the International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination. As part of its international obligations Canada is required to report on progress in improving the situation of racialized minorities, particularly in the workplace.

80. In 1982, the Charter of Rights and Freedoms entrenched in the Canadian constitution the framework for Justice and Equality for Black employees. Despite this, on September 24, 2020, over half a century later, Prime Minister Trudeau acknowledged that Systemic racism and discrimination is still a problem in Canada.

81. Under the UN General Assembly's "International Decade for People of African Descent (resolution 68/237), Canada affirmed the adoption of special measures, such as affirmative action, where appropriate, as essential to alleviating and remedying disparities in the enjoyment of human rights and fundamental freedoms affecting people of African descent, protecting them from discrimination and overcoming persistent or structural disparities and de facto inequalities resulting from historical circumstances.

82. Fulfillment of this resolution requires Canada to develop national plans of action to promote diversity, equality, social justice, equality of opportunity and the participation of all. By means of, inter alia, affirmative or positive actions and strategies, these plans should aim at creating conditions for all to participate effectively in decision-making and to realize civil, cultural, economic, political and social rights in all spheres of life on the basis of non-discrimination.

83. Canada has been taken to task by the UN for its failure to live up to its obligations under the terms of the Convention and particularly for its failure to adopt Employment Equity practices that are sufficiently particular and directed to address the plight of specific community groups including Black Canadians and of practices such as Black employee exclusion.

CANADA'S APPLICATION OF THE EMPLOYMENT EQUITY ACT IS IN VIOLATION OF CHARTER EQUALITY RIGHTS OF BLACK EMPLOYEES

5 Every employer shall implement employment equity by

(a) identifying and eliminating employment barriers against persons in designated groups that result from the employer's employment systems, policies and practices that are not authorized by law; and

(b) instituting such positive policies and practices and making such reasonable accommodations as will ensure that persons in designated groups achieve a degree of representation in each occupational group in the employer's workforce that reflects their representation in

(i) the Canadian workforce, or

(ii) those segments of the Canadian workforce that are identifiable by qualification, eligibility or geography and from which the employer may reasonably be expected to draw employees.

85. The Act provides a legislative framework and mandate that requires the removal of barriers for the hiring and promotion of visible minorities in the public service and which requires Canada to undertake a regular and comprehensive assessment of candidates and employees including visible minorities to determine how the workplace can be better structured in a manner that properly reflects the diversity of Canada.

86. The Employment Equity Act establishes various categories including women, people with disabilities, aboriginal peoples and visible minorities whose conditions it seeks to ameliorate as part of the employment process.

87. The Employment Equity Act has failed in its goals and mandate to Black Employees. In particular, the Act fails to break down the category of visible minorities and thus ignores the unique, invisible and systemic racism faced by Black employees relative to other disadvantaged groups that are covered by the categories established by the Act.

88. In this respect the Act fails in its mandate to reflect the diversity of the Black community within the Public Service in a manner that respects and accords with proportional representation of the Black community as part of Canadian society and as members of the Public Service.

89. Canada's practice of Black employee exclusion has thwarted efforts under employment equity and human rights laws to remedy the systemic racism and discrimination experienced by Black employees. Black employees have thus been denied equal benefit and opportunity of the law in hiring and promotion within the Public Service.

90. The practice of Black employee exclusion has increased the stigma and vulnerability of the Plaintiffs and Class Members within the Public Service and society at large, leaving them to feel dehumanized, worthless, and excluded from the Canadian multicultural mosaic.

91. With respect to decisions on hiring and promotions, such practices are governed by enabling legislation for the Public Service. Such decisions are not subject to collective agreement grievance and arbitration clauses or related dispute resolution mechanisms.

92. A class action is the most appropriate procedural mechanism to address the systemic practice of Black employee exclusion in hiring and promotion practices throughout the Public Service having regard to the broad spectrum of public service entities and the diverse labour relations practices throughout the Public Service of Canada. It is also the most appropriate mechanism due to the historic and institutional systemic barriers faced by Black employees even among bodies such as the Canadian Human Rights Commission which is empowered to address individual claims of discrimination and harassment, as evidenced by the experience of Bernadeth Betchi and others that highlight the practice of Black employee exclusion within the Canadian Human Rights Commission.

Canada's Practice of the Black Employee Exclusion Violates Section 15 of the Charter

93. Section 15 of the Charter provides that:

15. (1) Every individual is equal before and under the law and has the right to the equal protection and equal benefit of the law without discrimination and, in particular, without discrimination based on race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability.

(2) Subsection (1) does not preclude any law, program or activity that has as its object the amelioration of conditions of disadvantaged individuals or groups including those that are disadvantaged because of race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability.

94. Canada has improperly applied its obligations under the Employment Equity Act, including under s.5 and has accordingly denied Black employees membership in and promotion within the Public Service based on their race due to the widespread practice of Black employee exclusion.

95. Canada has failed to establish or meet required goals for the hiring and promotion of Black employees within the Public Service at all levels, in a manner proportional to their numbers within the Public Service or the population at large.

96. Canada has also failed to hire and promote Black employees in a manner and to a degree consistent with the hiring and promotion of other visible minorities within the Public Service.

Canada's hiring and promotion of Black employees has also been grossly disproportional to the hiring of other White employees within the Public Service.

97. By its actions, Canada has treated Black employees in an adverse differential manner and has drawn distinctions between Black employees and other Public Service employees in the hiring and promotion of Black employees in a manner that has imposed a burden and disadvantage on the identified class of Black employees which was not imposed on others, and certainly not on White employees.

98. To the extent that Canada's practice of Black employee exclusion including in its application of the Employment Equity Act fails to incorporate mechanisms of inclusion, individual assessment and accommodation to specifically address all barriers, including institutional, structural, invisible and systemic barriers to the inclusion of Black employees within the Public Service, Canada's policies and their application to Black employees has been discriminatory and has exacerbated their exclusion and marginalization from the Public Service workforce in a way that has undermined the substantive equality of Black employees based on their race.

99. Canada's actions have contributed to and exacerbated the historical disadvantage of Black employees in the Public Service.

100. Canada has undermined access to employment and promotions for Black employees in the Public Service in a manner contrary to s.15 of the Charter, based on its practice of Black employee exclusion and the imposition of institutional, structural, invisible and systemic barriers.

101. A mandatory order from this Court is required to eliminate Canada's practice of Black employee exclusion and in order to implement a proper Diversity and Promotional Plan for Black Public Service Employees, which is required to move Canada toward inclusion of Black employees within the Public Service in a manner that breaks down institutional, structural, invisible and systemic barriers in a manner consistent with s.15 of the Charter.

102. Damages should be awarded pursuant to section 24 of the Charter and section 49 of the Québec Charter to redress the harms of Canada's practice of Black employee exclusion and its impact on all Class Members.

CANADA HAS BEEN NEGLIGENT IN ITS TREATMENT AND EXCLUSION OF BLACK EMPLOYEES

103. Canada owes Black employees a duty of care. This duty entails an obligation to promote Black employees based on merit, talent and ability, as is the case for any other employee.

104. This duty confers upon Canada an obligation to break down the barriers to the full participation of Black employees in the Public Service and not to conduct itself through acts or practices that discriminate against Black employees.

105. Canada and the constituent parts of the Public Service has repeatedly breached its duty of care to the Plaintiffs and to Class Members which has resulted in foreseeable harm. Canada has systemically discriminated against Black employees by the imposition of its practice of Black employee exclusion which has thwarted Canada's legal obligations with respect to the application of lawful policies, practices and procedures relating to the hiring and promotion of Black Employees and to the achievement of true equality and employment equity.

106. At all material times, Canada had a responsibility to the Plaintiffs and to Class Members to create and maintain a workplace free from discrimination and harassment on the basis of race. In particular, Canada was legally precluded from implementing the practice of Black employee exclusion, which has had the effect of demeaning and discriminating against the Plaintiffs and Class Members for years. Whether pursuant to a common law duty of care or the duty not to cause harm to others articulated by art. 1457 of the Civil Code of Quebec (previously art. 1053 of the Civil Code of Lower Canada), Canada has clearly breached its duty.

107. Since Canada employed all Plaintiffs and Class Members, the relationship between Canada and Class Members was sufficiently direct and proximate so as to give rise to a duty of care. At the very least, this duty obliged Canada to refrain from engaging in discriminatory exclusion practices based on race.

108. The Plaintiffs and Class Members suffered physical and psychological harm as a direct result of Canada's implementation of its practice of Black employee exclusion. This harm was a wholly foreseeable consequence of Canada's actions.

109. Canada and its Public Service and broader public service entities repeatedly breached their obligations to Plaintiffs and to Class Members and in so doing caused them significant injury for which Class Members are entitled to be compensated.

Breach of Fiduciary Duty

110. The relationship between Class Members and Canada was one of trust, reliance and dependency. At all material times, Canada had significant control and discretion over Class Members. The Plaintiffs and Class Members were by virtue of the nature of their work subject to constant contact with, supervision by and direction from Canada.

111. In the maintenance of the public trust in the delivery of public services, Canada has a unique and special obligation to the public which is legal and fiduciary in nature. Having regard to the public service obligations and duties performed by all Class Members, the relationship between Canada and Class Members went well beyond the kind that normally arises between an employer and its employees. As a result, Canada owes Class Members a fiduciary duty.

112. The existence of this fiduciary duty gave rise to a reasonable expectation on the part of Class Members that Canada would act in their best interest, ensuring that they were treated respectfully, fairly and equally. At the very least, Class Members could reasonably expect that Canada would not actively employ barriers and practices to exclude, harm and to denigrate them.

113. To the extent that Class Members relied on Canada to fulfil its fiduciary obligations, this reliance was misplaced to the detriment of Class Members. Far from acting in the best interests of Class Members, Canada's implementation of its practice of Black employee exclusion resulted in a flagrant breach of Canada's fiduciary duty to Class Members. It also caused significant harm to Class Members.

Wrongful Dismissal and Denial of Promotions

114. Canada breached the actual and implied employment obligations that it owed to all Class Members when it implemented its practice of Black employee exclusion and denied promotions to Black employees on the basis of their race. Such practices often resulted in the forced resignation or termination of Class Members and/or the denial of promotions.

115. This breach resulted in, among other things, a glass ceiling at the bottom for Black employees.

Breach of the Charter and the Quebec Charter

116. In relation to the systemic discriminatory conduct of the Public Service and the wrongful failure to promote, the Plaintiffs and Class Members plead they are:

- a. Members of a disadvantaged group covered by s.15 of the Charter;
- b. qualified for the jobs for which they applied; and

c. qualified for the jobs for which they should have been hired and/or promoted;

117. The Plaintiffs and Class Members were equally qualified relative to the persons who obtained the desired positions. The persons who received these positions were treated more favourably than the Class Members who applied, for reasons other than merit, talent, skill and ability.

118. The practice of Black employee exclusion created a stark distinction solely based on race between Class Members and Public Service employees who applied for and received positions and promotions sought by the Class Members. This distinction has resulted in enormous prejudice to Class Members and has sent the inescapable message that Black employees are not fit for public service in Canada.

119. The practice of Black employee exclusion has perpetuated the invisible, institutional and systemic biases and attitudes that Black people are less worthy than others of legal and other protections and that they are incapable of safely, competently and effectively performing the same functions as other individuals employed by Canada, particularly at the higher levels of the Public Service.

120. By engaging in the practice of Black employee exclusion, Canada has infringed the rights of Class members under s. 15 of the Charter.

121. Given the nature of the harm suffered by Class Members and the flagrant nature of Canada's actions, a just remedy for this violation requires an award of damages under s. 24(1). Damages should compensate Class Members' personal loss, including the permanent psychological harm they have suffered. Damages should also vindicate Class Members' rights and would serve the important public purpose of deterring comparable government action in the future.

122. In carrying out the practice of Black employee exclusion, Canada denied Class Members full recognition of their human rights and freedoms based on their race and defied basic Charter values. Canada further terminated the employment of Class Members or denied them promotion on this same basis. The practice of Black employee exclusion implemented throughout the Public Service represents a pernicious form of systemic discrimination against all Black employees and Class Members that violates the Charter rights of Class Members.

DAMAGES

123. The Plaintiffs claim, on their own behalf and on behalf of Class Members, pecuniary damages arising from Canada's practice of Black employee exclusion, and by application of the terms of the Employment Equity Act in a manner contrary to s.15 of the Charter.

124. The Plaintiffs further claim non-pecuniary damages for the following injuries stemming from the implementation of the practice of Black employee exclusion and for the denial of hiring and promotions to Black Employees, on their own behalf and on behalf of the Class:

- (a) emotional and psychological harm and distress;
- (b) exacerbation of psychological illness and the creation of new psychological illnesses;
- (c) harm to dignity and self-respect;
- (d) an impaired ability to enjoy and participate in recreational, social, and employment activities and to form personal relationships;
- (e) the loss of general enjoyment of life; and
- (f) such further and other non-pecuniary damages as the Plaintiffs and Class Members may advise prior to trial in this matter.

125. The Plaintiffs seek damages under s. 24(1) of the Canadian Charter on their own behalf and on behalf of the Class.

126. As a result of wrongdoing of Canada and the Public Service, their management and their employees, agents and servants, Family Members have also sustained and will continue to sustain injury, loss and damages, including but not limited to:

- (a) actual expenses reasonably incurred for the benefit of the Plaintiffs and Class Members;
- (b) travel expenses incurred while visiting the Plaintiffs and Class Members during medical procedures and/or counselling and/or recovery; and
- (c) loss of income and/or the value of services provided by Family Members of the Plaintiffs and Class Members, where such services, including nursing and housekeeping have been provided.

127. Family Members seek compensation for the costs set out above as well as compensation for loss of support, guidance, care and companionship that they might reasonably have expected to receive from the Plaintiffs and Class Members.

Provincial Health Insurers

128. As a consequence of the conduct of Canada, the Ontario Health Insurance Plan ("OHIP") and comparable provincial and territorial health insurers have incurred expenses with respect to the medical treatment of the Plaintiffs and Class Members, for which they are entitled to be compensated by virtue of their subrogated and direct rights of action in respect of all past and future insured services. This action is maintained on behalf of the Ministry, OHIP and all other provincial and territorial health insurers.

Honorarium

129. The Representative Plaintiffs seek an honorarium for their roles in advancing this historic action on behalf of all Class Members.

Injustice anywhere is a threat to justice everywhere. We are caught in an inescapable network of mutuality, tied in a single garment of destiny. Whatever affects one directly, affects all indirectly

PART 2. AGENCIES IN RELATION TO EMPLOYMENT OF PLAINTIFFS SELECTED SUMMARY

Canada Revenue Agency (“CRA”)

CRA employs approximately 43,000 employees across Canada. CRA is responsible for the administration of tax programs, as well as the delivery of economic and social benefits. It also administers certain provincial and territorial tax programs. According to the Code of Integrity and Professional Conduct of CRA:

We work together to create healthy workplaces by interacting with civility and respect, embracing diversity and inclusiveness, and making efforts to ensure people feel heard and valued. We do this to support the physical and psychological health, safety, and well-being of all CRA employees, managers, and executives. We show respect.

Employment and Social Development Canada (“ESDC”)

ESDC employs approximately 25,000 employees. ESDC is responsible for portfolios including Service Canada and the Labour Program.

ESDC holds out that it “works to improve the standard of living and quality of life for all Canadians. It claims to do this by promoting a labour force that is highly skilled. It also claims to promote an efficient and inclusive labour market.”

ESDC states in its Raison d’être that the mission of ESDC, including the Labour Program and Service Canada, is “to build a stronger and more inclusive Canada, to support Canadians in helping them live productive and rewarding lives and improving Canadians’ quality of life.”

Public Prosecution Service of Canada (“PPSC”)

PPSC employs approximately 900 employees. PPSC states that is a national, independent and accountable prosecuting authority whose main objective is to prosecute federal offences and provides legal advice and assistance to law enforcement.

The stated mission of PPSC is to serve the public by prosecuting cases with diligence, in a manner that is fair, impartial, and objective; seeking to protect the rights of individuals and to uphold the rule of law; and working within the criminal justice system to help make Canada a safe and just society.

It states that its values are: Respect, Integrity, Excellence and Leadership. Although it systemically discriminated against members of the Black community, it maintained simultaneously that Respect forms the basis of relationships with fellow employees and with the public; Integrity motivates employees to apply the highest ethical and professional standards; Excellence inspires employees in all aspects of their work; and Leadership characterizes the organization's efforts to improve the quality of criminal justice throughout Canada.

Correctional Service of Canada ("CSC")

CSC is a federal agency within the Government of Canada's Public Safety portfolio. CSC employs approximately 17,500 employees.

The work of CSC includes managing institutions of various security levels, preparing inmates for safe release, and supervising offenders under conditional release and long-term supervision orders in the community.

Canada Border Services Agency ("CBSA")

CBSA employs approximately 14,000 employees, including more than 7,700 uniformed officers who work at over 1,000 points of service across Canada and in 37 international locations. CBSA states that it "works to ensure Canada's security and prosperity by managing the access of people and goods to and from Canada."

CBSA states: "We know that our employees define us. Our workplace is built on respect, integrity and service excellence." It further claims that its workforce is "born of the rich history that is our legacy, we are proud to protect and serve Canadians and confident in our ability to meet new challenges. We are united in our resolve to carry out our diverse mandate and enforce the laws of Canada with impartiality and fairness."

Department of National Defence ("DND")

DND has over 27,000 employees. DND is one of the largest federal government departments in Canada with its employees situated in over 40 locations across Canada and abroad. DND claims that it has built a diverse and inclusive workforce that is welcoming of individual differences, and that with so many locations to choose from and nearly 70 different types of career opportunities, working at DND means flexibility and mobility.

DND further states that it values its employees and that it strives to create a high performing workforce that is representative of the population it serves.

Royal Canadian Mounted Police ("RCMP")

The RCMP has over 6,000 civilian employees.

The RCMP consists of approximately 18,500 police officers who, along with civilian employees, make up Canada's national police service. The RCMP is unique in that it provides policing services at the international, federal, provincial and municipal levels.

We know that diversity in our workforce makes us stronger and we are committed to building a police service that reflects the communities we serve.

Statistics Canada ("SC")

SC has over 5000 employees serving Canada with high-quality statistical information. It produces statistics on our population, resources, economy, society and culture to help Canadians better understand our country.

In addition to conducting a Census every five years, there are about 350 active surveys on virtually all aspects of Canadian life.

In Canada, providing statistics is a federal responsibility. As Canada's central statistical office, SC is legislated to serve this function for the whole of Canada and each of the provinces and territories.

Immigration, Refugees and Citizenship Canada ("IRCC")

IRCC has over 4,500 employees. IRCC facilitates the arrival of immigrants, provides protection to refugees, and offers programming to help newcomers settle in Canada. It also grants citizenship, and issues travel documents including passports to Canadians.

IRCC was created in 1994 to link immigration services with citizenship registration, promote the unique ideals all Canadians share and help build a stronger Canada.

Since then, IRCC has taken over the administration of the passport program.

Canadian Armed Forces ("CAF")

CAF has current authorized strength of 71,500 Regular Force members and 30,000 Reserve Force members. The number of filled positions is lower than the authorized strength.

CAF are the unified armed forces of Canada, as constituted by the National Defence Act, which states: "The Canadian Forces are the armed forces of Her Majesty raised by Canada and consist of one Service called the Canadian Armed Forces."

This unified institution consists of sea, land, and air elements referred to as the Royal Canadian Navy (RCN), Canadian Army, and Royal Canadian Air Force (RCAF). Personnel may belong to either the Regular Force or the Reserve Force, which has four sub-components: the Primary Reserve, Supplementary Reserve, Cadet Organizations Administration and Training Service, and the Canadian Rangers.

Under the National Defence Act, the Canadian Armed Forces are an entity separate and distinct from the Department of National Defence, which also exists as the civilian support system for the Forces.

Canadian Human Rights Commission (“CHRC”)

The Commission operates across Canada with a staff of 256 employees intended to promote an inclusive society where everyone is valued and respected and to promote and protect human rights in Canada. It was established in 1977 by the government of Canada. It is empowered under the Canadian Human Rights Act to investigate and try to settle complaints of discrimination in employment and in the provision of services within federal jurisdiction.

CHRC’s stated Mandate is to protect the core principle of equal opportunity and to promote a vision of an inclusive society free from discrimination by:

- (a) promoting human rights through research and policy development;
- (b) protecting human rights through a fair and effective complaints process;
- (c) representing the public interest to advance human rights for all Canadians; and
- (d) auditing employers under federal jurisdiction for compliance with employment equity.
